Fire Up The Grill With Something Different This Year

Late spring often marks the return of grilling season, when friends and families gather in the backyard to share some great food and some good times. Such affairs tend to be more laid back, but that doesn't mean they can't boast cuisine that's as delicious as food you might find at more formal affairs. For those who want to try something different from the traditional grilling fare like hamburgers and hot dogs this season, consider the following recipe for "Spit-Roasted Whole Spring Lamb Overcome By Garlic" from Andrew Schloss and David Joachim's "Mastering the Grill" (Chronicle Books).

SPIT-ROASTED WHOLE SPRING LAMB OVERCOME BY GARLIC
Makes 12 servings

12 branches fresh rosemary
3 heads garlic, separated into cloves and peeled
1 small whole lamb, 25 pounds or so, dressed for spit-roasting
2 lemons, halved
1/2 cup olive oil, plus more if needed
3 tablespoons kosher salt
1 1/2 tablespoons ground black pepper
3 scallions, roots trimmed

THE GRILL:
Gas: Indirect, medium on a gas-fired spit roaster
Charcoal: Indirect, medium on a charcoal spit roaster, charcoal bed split into 4 corners (about 2 dozen coals per corner)
Wood: Indirect, medium on a wood-fired spit roaster, coal bed split into 4 corners

1. Strip the leaves from 8 of the rosemary branches and put the leaves in a food processor, along with the peeled cloves from 21/2 heads of garlic. Pulse until finely chopped. (Make and refrigerate up to two days ahead to get a jump on things.)
2. Put the lamb on a large work surface with the chest cavity up. Squeeze the juice from the lemons into a bowl, discarding the seeds but saving the rinds. Rub half of the lemon juice all over the inside of the lamb cavity and inner thighs. Rub the entire cavity with 1/4 cup of the olive oil. Sprinkle the cavity with one-third of the garlic mixture, 1 tablespoon of the salt and 2 teaspoons of the pepper. Put the scallions, remaining 4 branches rosemary, remaining peeled garlic cloves, and the spent lemon rinds into the cavity.

3. Push the spit rod through the lamb's rear, along the cavity parallel to the backbone, and out through the neck or upper chest. Lay the lamb on its side with the cavity facing you so that you can wire the backbone to the spit rod. Position an 8-inch length of wire in the center of the cavity. Insert the wire through the inside of the lamb near the backbone and rod. When the wire pokes through the outside of the lamb, bend the wire around the outside of the backbone and push it back through the lamb so that the entire length of wire is wrapped around the backbone and rod. Use pliers to twist the two ends of the wire together, securing the wire very tightly around the spit rod. Repeat this process at roughly 4-inch intervals toward the rear and front of the animal until the backbone is securely fastened to the rod.

4. Slide the spit rod's skewers over the front and rear ends of the rod. Push the skewers firmly into the shoulders and thighs or hips of the lamb, then tighten the skewers onto the rod.
5. Attach the hind legs and forelegs to the rod with wire, twisting the ends of the wire until secured. Attach the neck to the rod in the same way.
6. Wire the lamb cavity shut by sewing from one end to the other one long piece of wire. Twist each end of the wire with pliers to secure it. (You could also sew the cavity shut with kitchen twine or heavy cotton string and a large needle.)

7. Make 20 to 30 small, 1/2-inch deep slits all over the outside of the lamb, especially around the shoulders and legs. Use your fingers to stuff each slit with the remaining garlic mixture (be mindful of the sharp ends of the wire as you work). Rub the remaining lemon juice all over the outside of the lamb. Rub all over with the remaining 1/4 cup of olive oil, then sprinkle with the remaining 2 tablespoons salt and 2 1/2 teaspoons pepper.
8. If using wood chunks or chips, soak them in water for 1 hour. Heat the spit-roaster as directed. If using charcoal, light about 30 pounds (11 1/2 large bags) of charcoal. When the coals are just ashed over, rake them into 4 piles near the 4 corners of the firebox.

9. Attach the spit-roasted lamb to the roaster so that the lamb rests 1 to 2 feet above the coals. If necessary, re-rake the coals to position the 4 piles just outside the shoulders and thighs so that the lamb cooks by indirect heat.
10. Roast over indirect heat for 5 to 5 1/2 hours, turning slowly but constantly. Add a few pounds of charcoal (about 2 dozen briquettes) to each pile when the old coals begin to burn low, about every hour, letting the charcoal ignite naturally. If using wood chunks or chips along with charcoal, add the soaked chunks to the hot coals every hour or so. After about 2 hours, re-rake the coals to position them directly beneath the lamb. Make 2 large piles beneath the shoulders and legs, connected by a shallow, narrow strip of coals beneath the ribs. During the last hour of cooking, if the lamb is not browning sufficiently, baste it all over with additional olive oil. When done, the meat should be well browned on the outside and tender inside, with some pink meat only near the bones. An instant-read thermometer inserted into the thickest parts of the thighs and shoulders should register about 150 F to 160 F.

11. Transfer the lamb to a large, clean work surface, and let rest for 20 minutes. Using wire cutters and pliers, remove the wire from the legs and neck. Remove the wire that sewed the cavity shut and the wire from around the backbone (you may be able to cut it from outside the animal instead of inside). Remove the spit's skewers, then pull out the spit rod. Be sure all of the wire is removed before serving.
12. Carve the meat from the bones, or scrape it off in chunks, and serve.

What is A Town?

A town is a group of people.

- It is a school.
- It is a city government.
- It is churches.
- It is industry and jobs.
- It is retail businesses.

They all have to work together. All must have the support of the people or there is no town.

Give your local merchant a chance for your business and the first opportunity to make the sale. The local retailer pays the highest percentage of local taxes. They are the ones contacted first for contributions to charitable projects. They provide jobs. Without their store you have no town.
