Ask the Acupuncturist...

Veronica Cavella Pedersen, L.Ac.

Q.: Like many millions who watched the Olympics, I saw the circular marks on Michael Phelps and other competitors and learned that they came from "cupping". Is this therapy useful for average people who are not Olympic athletes competing at this level?
 A.: I am sure I speak for Acupuncturists around the world when I express my gratitude to the Olympic athletes who drew so much attention to the ancient art of cupping. These athletes, the best in the world, were using cupping to accelerate muscle recovery in order to keep up with their grueling schedules. As we saw, some of them competed in multiple events, with not a lot of time between them. This healing technique is not reserved for top athletes however, and average people can also benefit from cupping for a number of health issues. In addition to promoting muscle recovery, cupping is an effective treatment for pain in the back, neck, legs and arms. Lung problems also respond well to cupping as part of an acupuncture treatment. Although the cups are positioned superficially at the skin level, often on the back, the effect is said to penetrate to a depth of perhaps four inches. For this reason relief can be obtained in cases of asthma, pneumonia, bronchitis, or a chest cold to clear congestion and help open the airways. Detoxification is another benefit of cupping as it pulls toxins to the surface where they can more easily be dispersed. Increased blood flow to the area is also stimulated to promote healing. Cupping therapy goes back thousands of years and the types of cups used evolved over time. Early records indicate this therapy being used in China, and then throughout other countries in the Middle East. Materials used were bamboo, animal horn, and then glass and these are still in use today in different cultures. They are often used as part of an acupuncture treatment which also includes needling, but sometimes they are used alone. The round glass cups are my personal favorites, and are sometimes referred to as "fire cups" because a flame is introduced into the cup to consume the oxygen within and create a vacuum. Then the cup is quickly inverted onto the area being treated, which has been prepared using a lubricant, and a mild suction is experienced by the patient. The cups are left in place for fifteen to thirty minutes. If there is blood stagnation in the area, the round marks will appear. In color they can range from pink, to red, to a deep purple, and the marks can remain for up to a few days before fading. Some fade very quickly, depending on the patient's condition. The lubricant applied allows for the cups to be moved around to apply a pleasant massage to the area before removing them. Other cups commonly used today are plastic with a rubber suction ball attached at the top. These are applied by squeezing the ball to create suction to the degree desired. These cups are particularly convenient in treating children where a flame can be avoided for safety reasons. Another system of plastic cups often used has the suction delivered through a pump. Acupuncturists use the system they prefer and find most effective for their patients' needs. Veronica Cavella Pedersen, L.Ac. practices Acupuncture and Traditional Chinese Medicine for adults and children at 154 Deysher Road, Fleetwood, PA 19522 (Rockland Township), 610-987-0489, and invites you to submit your questions for possible publication to asktheacupuncturist@yahoo.com. She is also available to speak to your group about the benefits of Acupuncture and TCM. See ad and like her on Facebook.

Peanut Butter Can Be Savory And Healthy!

Peanut butter is often associated with school day sandwiches and sweet desserts. But peanut butter is not just for school lunch anymore. Though it's a high-calorie food, peanut butter boasts many health benefits and can be added to recipes for a nutritional boost. Many of the calories in peanut butter come from fat, but the majority of the fats in peanut butter are monounsaturated and have been shown to improve cholesterol by lowering low-density lipoprotein, often referred to as "bad" cholesterol, in the blood. Furthermore, peanut butter contains polyunsaturated fats that can help raise high-density lipoprotein, or "good" cholesterol. As a result, when eaten in moderation, peanut butter may help reduce risk of cardiovascular disease. Peanuts are high in fiber and are an excellent source of protein. Vegetarians or those who do not include much meat in their diets may find that peanut butter, which includes eight grams of protein in every two-tablespoon serving, is a great way to consume their daily recommended amounts of protein.

When preparing foods, choose a peanut butter that is as unprocessed as possible. The fewer the ingredients the better the health benefits. Some brands will include trans-fats and additional oils that can negate some of the natural health benefits. Read labels and look for a container that lists only ground peanuts and possibly trace amounts of salt for flavoring.

The National Peanut Board touts the benefits of peanuts and has a number of different recipes available on their Web site at www.nationalpeanutboard.org. Here is a savory dish that can be served for dinner when the temperatures dip.

BAKED PORK CHOPS WITH A SPICY PEANUT GLAZE

- 2 pork chops, fat trimmed
- 2 tablespoons cooking oil
- 2 tablespoons natural creamy peanut butter
- 2 tablespoons milk (or non-dairy substitute)
- 1 tablespoon white vinegar
- 2 teaspoons chili powder
- 1 teaspoon salt (1/4 teaspoon if your peanut butter is already salted)

Preheat oven to 350 F. Line a pan with aluminum foil, place the pork chops on the pan and drizzle with the cooking oil to coat. Make sure that the oil covers the whole pork chop to prevent burning. When the oven is preheated, put in the pork chops and bake them for 30 minutes.

While the pork chops are cooking, combine the peanut butter, chili powder, vinegar, milk, and salt in a small dish. Whisk together to emulsify. Remove the pork chops from the oven and evenly distribute the sauce between both chops, brushing on in an even layer. Put the pork chops back in the oven for 10 more minutes to finish cooking and to allow the sauce to thicken. This baked pork chop get its flavor from a spicy peanut glaze.
